Unique Features of STRIDE

Involvement of Young Talent

STRIDE envisages creation of trans-disciplinary researchers among graduate, post-graduate doctoral and post-doctoral student population in HEIs. The students admitted to HEIs come from various locales having different socio-cultural background. These students may be encouraged to conduct systematic study of locale specific socio-economic problems

Students (Under Graduate and Post-Graduate)

The UG and PG students may be encouraged to investigate socio-economic issues pertaining to a selected community and will be selected on merit through a robust process of selection involving eminent faculty.

Research Fellows (Doctoral and Post-Doctoral): Young Faculty:

The HEIs may design specific research program and announce research fellowships clearly specifying its objectives. Generally, PG candidates must have cleared UGC's NET or equivalent national examination for research fellowships. In exceptional cases, some of the best graduates without NET shall be given project fellowships based on merit and relevance.

Research Methodology & Applications of SPSS

What Is SPSS and Its Importance in Research & Data Analysis?

SPSS (Statistical package for the social sciences) is the set of software programs that are combined together in a single package. The basic application of this program is to analyze scientific data related with the social science. This data can be used for market research, surveys, data mining, etc.

With the help of the obtained statistical information, researchers can easily understand the demand for a product in the market, and can change their strategy accordingly. Basically, SPSS first store and organize the provided data, then it compiles the data set to produce suitable output. SPSS is designed in such a way that it can handle a large set of variable data formats.

Read How SPSS Helps in Research & Data Analysis Programs:

SPSS is revolutionary software mainly used by research scientists which help them process critical data in simple steps. Working on data is a complex and time consuming process, but this software can easily handle and operate information with the help of some techniques. These techniques are used to analyze, transform, and produce a characteristic pattern between different data variables. In addition to it, the output can be obtained through graphical representation so that a user can easily understand the result. Read below to understand the factors that are responsible in the process of data handling and its execution.

1. Data Transformation: This technique is used to convert the format of the data. After changing the data type, it integrates same type of data in one place and it becomes easy to manage it. You can insert the different kind of data into SPSS and it will change its structure as per the system specification and requirement. It means that even if you change the operating system, SPSS can still work on old data.

2. Regression Analysis: It is used to understand the relation between dependent and interdependent variables that are stored in a data file. It also explains how a change in the value of an interdependent variable can affect the dependent data. The primary need of regression analysis is to understand the type of relationship between different variables.

3. ANOVA (Analysis of variance): It is a statistical approach to compare events, groups or processes, and find out the difference between them. It can help you understand which method is more suitable for executing a task. By looking at the result, you can find the feasibility and effectiveness of the particular method.

4. MANOVA (Multivariate analysis of variance): This method is used to compare data of random variables whose value is unknown. MANOVA technique can also be used to analyze different types of population and what factors can affect their choices.

5. T-tests: It is used to understand the difference between two sample types, and researchers apply this method to find out the difference in the interest of two kinds of groups. This test can also understand if the produced output is meaningless or useful.
